Janet Fielding was a Dr Who girl for 3 years in the early 80s. She is a founder of Women in Film and Television UK which she ran for the first four years. It has been an incredibly successful campaigning organization for 25 years and its members include some of the most important women in the film and television industry. When legendary London agent Marina Martin was ready to retire she recruited Janet to take over her eponymous agency. As an agent, Janet’s clients included Simon Callow, Rhys Ifans, Hugh Bonneville, Bill Paterson and Anne Marie Duff. Janet sold the agency to the women who worked for her and while developing her writing career, worked part-time as Head of Finance for charity, One Plus One. In 2008, she moved to Ramsgate and started Project MotorHouse which is a charity and social enterprise that works with local deprived youth and is saving a building set into the cliffs overlooking the English Channel. When complete, rents from the 6.5 million pound development will subsidise the charity’s youth work.
